A: A better alternative is to use sys.info('DATABASE') as it gives lots of information about the server, including how many rows in some table, what programs are running, etc. from sys.config import get_config setting = get_config() fullName = "database" dbName = setting['display']['Database']['dbName'] schema = setting['display']['Database']['schema'] engine = setting['display']['Database']['engine'] owner = setting['display']['Database']['owner'] uid = setting['display']['Database']['uid'] cid = setting['display']['Database']['cid'] print(str(schema) + "." + str(engine) + "." + str(uid) + "." + str(cid) + " (" + str(fullName) + ")") I like to have a drink during the day – ok, who doesn't? This is me drinking something of a morning with a couple friends. I like to have a drink during the day – ok, who doesn't? This is me drinking something of a morning with a couple friends. But it's summer. So, I get home from my job, I like to check to see if my plants are ok. I make myself some tea, and I go look in on the garden. The air is fresh with a dose of the green smell of plant. The sun sparkles on the green leaves of the plants and makes their colours come alive. The air is fresh with a dose of the green smell of plant. The sky is a blue-grey, as if the sun is just waking up and then it's morning. I drink my tea, and then I go through the garden, checking. I find a number of plants that are wilting. Then I notice, under my roof, one of my plants is beginning to wilt. Then I look at it and I remember -I thought it was a week ago- that I was watering the plant, but it had more than one pot. And one pot was dry. I get annoyed, I get angry, and then suddenly I get sad. I go to put the pots back in 3da54e8ca3
